
THE WORD OF THE EDITOR-IN-CHIEF

The new issue of the Politics and Religion Journal. (Vol. 13, No. 1, 2019) is published. This is a great jubilee, which says a lot about the value of our project. In 13 years, a child will graduate from elementary and high school, and finish its freshman year at college. Our journal is that old. In addition to that, I can proudly say that the idea of a specific scientific discipline, politology of religion, has been widely accepted during all this years. This discipline was firstly introduced in the curricula at Faculty of Political Science, University of Belgrade (school year 1993-1994). However, one of the best and vivid evidences that this discipline has its sense is the number of issues of the Journal, and moreover the rise of submissions and colleagues who wants to be reviewers for our Journal. At this point, I believe that we are one of the most international journal in the world, when it comes to the main topics covered, along with racial, ethnic and religious background of the authors and reviewers. Our web site data offers additional proof regarding readers of the journal, who came from all over the world, including Fiji, Antigua and Barbuda, Tuvalu...

We will continue to be a forum where different opinions can be expressed, regardless to political correctness. However, there is one condition for our authors: strict use of the scientific methodology, and the use of scientifically proven facts. Later interpretation of these facts is the absolute right of authors, and readers. Hopefully, this issue will be additional argument in supporting this statement. And the very table of content will surely provide additional argument that our greatest value is our authors.
